DDD

Why do I get into a pattern of negative behaviours that I don't seem to have any control over no matter how much my mind understand it is unreasonable ...

DDD is a set of Implants - Parasitic Beings that can attach between our various bodies including the physical body. They are mass-less and extremely quiet when not active, thus very hard to detect unless we purposefully investigate for their presence. They are normally dormant until a trigger comes

Here is an example of how a very typical set might affects us.

Dread - Doom - Disaster set

With even a slightest trigger, once a sense of Dread arises, this will lead to the sense of Doom that creates series of Disaster scenarios that feels realistic even it is remotely probable them to be true. The physical sensation of anxiety, panic and real fear usually accompany in this situation. The key identification of DDD set is the impossibility of getting out of this sense of darkness. Even if we manage to get out of it eventually, there lingers the fear of this happening again, so we continue to feel helpless... and when the next trigger comes, it confirms our fear.

Example type of DDD set (A list of DDD is on page 3 of this file)

Desolation - Despair - Destruction
Disappointed - Deflated - Dimmed
Devalued - Defunct / or Defiant - Derail

Acrasia

It is often located at the back of of the neck, like a rod or a triangular plate. This creates an amnesiac moment in which you find yourself in a situation where you have done something exactly what you did not wish to do. No matter how much you'd try, you cannot remember the moment that pushed you to take that action.

Electric Circuit Breaker

Just like the household Circuit Breaker, this device will disable certain function. Upon a trigger, this cuts you off from function in that particular area over and over.

Mirrors There are different types of mirrors.

You may be avoiding looking into mirrors or you may be obsessively looking into mirrors. The mirrors may be showing you what you do not wish to see.
